

lush green wilderness of tall forests and a range of accommodation choices from camping to cabins.

Windsurfers are also spoiled for choice in this area as the winds sweep along the length of the coastline, creating fast and challenging currents.

In contrast, northern Western Australia boasts more seasonal surf with places like Red Bluff and Gnoraloo Bay near Carnarvon as two of the most sought-after spots.

Around this area, the desert meets the coast where pristine waters wash against unique rock formations.

Here the best wave surfing months are May to August and many world-class surfers can be seen 'getting tubed' through the well-formed hollow waves.

Come September, it's a different story as the wave riders make way for windsurfers through until March. In these waters you can surf in remote locations under the watchful eye of whales, dolphins and manta rays. The water is clear and the sun is warm.

These isolated spots require a well-equipped surfer so you'll be camping beachside, close to the waves. But you don't have to travel too far out of Perth for great wind and wave surfing experiences. Accessible and challenging... you can try Lancelin and Geraldton for windsurfing or Trigg Island Beach and Scarborough Beach for waves.

Windsurfing with a city feel can also be enjoyed in Perth's Swan River with key spots being Lucky Bay and Pelican Point. If you want learning assistance, there are numerous places throughout the State which run high quality wind and wave lessons. All you need is the enthusiasm and they can deck you out with all the rest.

Surfers of all kinds won't be disappointed here. This wild, expansive coastline produces enough wind and waves for everyone.

It's world class... just ask the professionals!
